Programme Overview

The Community Work Programme (CWP) is a South African government programme that provides an employment safety net and basic minimum income for people living in marginalised areas where access to employment opportunities is very often limited. CWP was initiated to counter high unemployment and poverty levels in South Africa and is designed to contribute to the government's strategic goals in addressing poverty and unemployment.

Beulah Africa Foundation formed a Joint Venture with a reputable NPO, Future Families, to implement the CWP programme across 18 municipalities in the North West Province. The Joint Venture worked with the government and the people themselves and found solutions to make CWP work and ensure meaningful impact through the projects. Firstly, for the participants of CWP through personal development and reliable work, and secondly, through the projects implemented in communities.

TESTIMONIAL

"The training has given me insight, knowledge and new perspectives on how I look at things. I now know that, as a community member, I have the power to change things. I also learned how to deal with challenges without using violence.

My dream for my community is to see our youth being empowered, for them to receive bursaries and to have more workshops like this so that people can learn what we have learned. It was a pleasure to work with you, I had fun. I hope in future we will have more of these workshops because we are going to apply the knowledge I learnt in this training."

– Nomvula Hhumbani

TESTIMONIAL

"I started as a participant in CWP in Mahikeng, and later applied and was appointed as a supervisor. In 2018, I won the best site administrator award, and in 2019, my site won the best participation rate target award."
